Q: php error handling - return and die in script I am working on a site, and I want to handle the errors I am receiving. Right now I am using this: `try { //do stuff } catch(Exception $e) { //stuff }` where I am making sure that if any error occurs, the rest of the script is not executed. My question is, 1) Does throwing an exception occur under any circumstances? and/or 2) If so, what is the purpose of the try-catch? A: My question is, 1) Does throwing an exception occur under any circumstances? Yes, it does. and/or 2) If so, what is the purpose of the try-catch? The try-catch is for handling problems with the resources you are using in your code. If you don't handle problems in the resources you are using, then there can be serious consequences for your application. A: If an error occurs, an exception will be thrown. Then, the code in the try block will execute - in which case, you catch the exception to deal with it, and you can choose to continue or stop. A good place to understand this is in a foreach loop. If an error occurs in the loop, you will get an exception. `foreach($array as $value){ //error }` A: try-catch is very valuable for one very important use case. Imagine a file upload field. You want your user to be able to upload a file easily
