To use the extension select the Hype Machine search option when doing a search or type www.hypem.com in the web address text box. Hype Machine site Description: I had an idea to write an extension for this project. Basically, an extension that would let you write code by simply selecting the text you want to write, press the enter key, and the extension would add the text to your code. So, for example, you could make a javascript animation by selecting the parts of the code you want to animate and pressing enter. I've found the javascript code for text selection, but I couldn't find any extension that would actually add the selected code to the page. I tried writing one, but I ran into the issue that the javascript code I use to select text is initiated after the content of the element has been inserted. But, I noticed that most of the time when you press enter in a text area you get an onkeyup event. This gave me the idea that I could probably hack up a work around by subscribing to this event. I could probably go through the page's element in the onkeyup event and if it contains text, I could set the.innerHTML to the selected text and save the changes. I tried to do this, but ended up with a lot of bugs with the scrolling. So, I scrapped my approach and came up with this idea. So, I'm not sure if this extension should be posted. If you find it useful, I'll probably delete it soon. Anyway, here is my code: window.addEventListener('DOMContentLoaded', function () { document.addEventListener('keydown', function (event) { if (event.which === 13) { var element = document.getElementsByTagName('textarea')[0]; var range = document.createRange(); range.selectNodeContents
