Installing a driver for a random data receipt printer may be a time-consuming and complicated process, especially if you do not have the right driver. Most of the times, it is made of two major components: a controller and a driver. The controller is the part of the equipment that converts electronic commands received into mechanical movements of a printer head, and the driver is the software that is responsible for the communication between the controller and the computer, communicating the commands received to the printer head. The database part (in older printer setups, such as in WinXP, was COM1, which was later moved to COM8) contains all the information relevant for the printer. Categories Random Data Receipt Printer.
